

“IN TROY, THERE LIES THE SCENE”: THE TROJAN WAR IN MYTH AND MEMORY

Sports Illustrated, November 28, 1988; Gunning for No. 1

"Of course it is only a game, but somehow the Trojans, bursting out of that stadium tunnel, have come to stand for a way of life. The sight of those USC teams rolling across the Coliseum grass, dominating their opponents - and without a single penny of government aid that the UCLA's and Oklahomas and Nebraskas depended on, damn it. All of it happened, year after year because the school annually turned out a phalanx of new achievers, men who pulled themselves up by the bootstraps and went on to be the cream of their crops and the captains of their industries, men who started companies and expanded businesses that created jobs and took people off the welfare rolls, men who took care to plow back their superabundance into the institution that launched them, so that the Trojan tradition of independence and excellence would go on and on. Yes, the sight of that wave of cardinal and gold articulates everything. Maybe you cannot comprehend that. But a Trojan can."

DARES AND DICTYS

- The Cretan Dictys was said to have been a companion of Idomeneus during the Trojan War. His diary had supposedly been written in Greek and then found a millennium later during the reign of Nero and later translated into Latin.
- Dares was a Trojan priest of Hephaestus in the Iliad. It was said his eyewitness account had also survived and been translated into Latin.

12th Century Troy Stories

- Roman de Troie by Benoit de Ste. Marie: Benoit wove four tragic love stories into the ancient history of Troy, including the new story of Troilus and Briseida.
- The anonymous Eneas.
